

To those living in the American empire all worked up over the so-called "immigrant problem"...

If Mexico had seized half the United States in the mid-1800s and then for good measure invaded it 60 years later...

If Mexico had used its financial and corporate power to dominate America's economy, ruin its farmers and force the populations of whole towns to cross the border seeking a way to survive...

If Mexico had set up sweatshops just inside the U.S. along the southwestern border, luring in and profiting from cheap and desperate American labor until it was time to move those factories to China for even cheaper labor...

If Americans put the food on Mexican tables, cleaned Mexican homes, slaved in Mexican slaughterhouses and picked Mexican crops at wages Mexicans wouldn't even look at once...

If Mexican government agents hunted undocumented American workers like animals. Shot them at the border. Ripped them away from their families. Forced them to live in fear while gangs of armed racists were free to patrol the borders...

If the situation were reversed, and Americans were compelled to live in Mexico's shadows...

Would you still think the problem is undocumented immigrants?

America is a capitalist empire
It devours whole countries
And gives you the crumbs
Don't buy the bullshit
