

New York City, protesters shut down the Triboro Bridge, November 25.

Photo: Stephanie Keith

Denver, Colorado high school students, December 3

Photo: Special to revcom.us/Revolution

San Francisco public defenders, December 18

Photo: Special to revcom.us/Revolution

New York City, December 12, posters of the eyes of Eric Garner by French artist JR are carried in a march of tens of thousands.

Photo: Special to revcom.us/Revolution

A SALUTE TO THE FIGHTERS

Get Organized for an Actual Revolution

The murders by police this summer of Eric Garner and Michael Brown—along with murder after murder after murder of other unarmed Black and Latino men and children during these past months—and then the exoneration of the killers are, in one horrific sense, nothing new. These monsters have been doing this for years, and for years the system has let them walk. But this time things changed. People in Ferguson—the everyday people in the streets—rose up, and refused to back down in the face of violent repression. In doing so, they forced the world to wake the hell up. Around the country, and beyond, tens of thousands of people have poured into the streets from classrooms, housing projects, campuses, churches and workplaces—blocking bridges and freeways, defying threats and arrests, and disrupting “business as usual.” Artists, entertainers, and athletes are speaking out. What had been an outrage that oppressed people had been forced to learn to accept—however bitterly—and that other people had learned to ignore or shrug off, became intolerable. The inspiring and powerful movement that has begun to emerge in the wake of the uprising in Ferguson needs to spread and intensify.

Fight the Power, and Transform the People, for Revolution

Ferguson, Missouri outrage in August against the police murder of Michael Brown.

Photo: J. Oneal/revcom.us/Revolution

www.revcom.us