

At a time when major politicians speak of the war on Iraq as "god's will," religious fundamentalists attack the science of evolution, and invocations of faith become a litmus test for public office, three non-believers will discuss their views on:

- Is religion really harmful?
- What's the difference between science and faith?
- Can people be good without "god"?

with Massimo Pigliucci - Professor of Biology and Philosophy at SUNY - Stony Brook, author, with Jonathan Kaplan, of Making Sense of Evolution: The Conceptual Foundations of Evolutionary Biology, and Denying Evolution: Creation, Scientism and the Nature of Science. Massimo is a regular columnist for Skeptical Inquirer and Philosophy Now.

Sunsara Taylor - writer for Revolution newspaper and a host on Equal Time for Freethought on WBAI-NY. Sunsara is currently on a national campus speaking tour for AWAY WITH ALL GODS! Unchaining the Mind and Radically Changing the World, the recent book by Bob Avakian.

Paul Eckstein - Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Bergen Community College, Paramus NJ, Adjunct Lecturer in Philosophy at Montclair State University, and a host on Equal Time for Freethought on WBAI-NY.

Moderated by: Matthew Laclair - currently a student at Eugene Lang College, President of The Center for Inquiry on Campus and on the Board of Directors of Secular Student Alliance. Matthew came to national attention in September 2007 when the New York Times and Anderson Cooper reported on his attempts to stop his high school history teacher in Kearny, New Jersey from preaching his religious beliefs in class.

Sponsored by:
Equal Time for Freethought on WBAI-NY
and Atheists, Agnostics & Freethinkers at NYU

Thursday, November 20, 6:45-9:00
New York University
Kimmel Ctr. Room 914, 60 Washington Square South

for more information: www.equaltimeforfreethought.org or call 201-486-3420

Design: Robert Pasternak
rpasternakdesign@gmail.com